THE JUNIATA COLLEGE BULLETIN is published eight times per year (February, April, May, June, September, October, November and December). Second Class Postage paid at Huntingdon, Pa. 16652. Send Form 3579 to Juniata College, 17th and Moore Streets, Huntingdon, Pa. 16652.

Juniata College is an independent, privately supported, coeducational institution committed to providing a liberal arts education to qualified students regardless of sex, race, religion, creed or color. Its policies comply with requirements of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, and all other applicable federal, state and local statutes, regulations and guidelines.

ON THE COVER: From the early years of Juniata we feature an original stock certificate representing one share in the Brethren's Normal College. Juniata was chartered in 1878—two years after its founding—as a joint stock enterprise. The joint stock enterprise ended, however, in 1908, when the College was rechartered as a nonprofit institution. Since then its control has been vested in a self-perpetuating board of trustees.

We thought the certificate fitting for this issue, which includes Juniata's Report of Gifts for its 99th year, as a reminder that those who are listed herein yet recognize the value of "investing" their generous support in the future of higher education.

Also appearing in this issue is the final Presidential Report of Dr. John N. Stauffer, who stepped down from his post this fall. Dr. Stauffer's report, "Preparing for the Second Century," examines Juniata's seven-year advance during his distinguished tenure as president. In addition, Dr. John C. Baker, chairman of the board of trustees, briefly assesses the future of the college and Dr. Donald T. Hartman, newly-appointed dean of student services, explores some early benefits of Juniata's new curriculum.

The JC BULLETIN is designed and produced by the Offices of Alumni Affairs and Public Information: Charles R. Pollock, editor; Debra L. Peterson '74, assistant; Clayton N. Juniata College, Its Second Century -Dismal or Bright?

-by Dr. John C. Baker
Chairman, Board of Trustees

In 1976 Juniata College will celebrate its centennial. This historic occasion comes at a time when dire forecasts are appearing in many quarters about the future of independent liberal arts colleges such as Juniata. These pessimistic predictions imply at best the loss of independence for these colleges and a complete change of character, or at worst their total disappearance. Similar forecasts were made in the past, especially during the great depression of the 1930's. Those were indeed trying days for liberal arts colleges, but most came through that period sorely tested, but better prepared than ever before for service to students and to the nation. This is an appropriate time to ask, "Will Juniata's future be dismal or bright?"

Juniata College's first 100 years have been filled with crises, heroic sacrifices, lack of funds and struggles of every kind; nevertheless, its most noteworthy characteristics during these years have been the vision and dedication of its people—faculty, trustees, alumni and other supporters. Juniata College over its first 99 years had only seven presidents—a truly remarkable fact. Behind these presidents, however, it must never be forgotten, were equally loyal groups of men and women who devoted their lives to the college. The Brumbaughhs, the Ellises, the Ollers, the Swigarts, the Myerses and many, many other families should forever be thanked and remembered in Juniata history. They served Juniata through demanding years. Juniata's success was built on faith and continuity of devotion and she was and still is blessed with both. Here lies her great strength. It has been said, "Where one lacks the will to see things as they really are, there is nothing so mystifying as the obvious." This review of Juniata's situation is an attempt to explore the obvious—the present day strengths and weaknesses of the College—so as to dispel any mystery about its future.

In our present chaotic world and living as we do under an uneasy peace of "mutual terror," we find that any attempt to peer into the uncertain future of an institution is difficult. However, it may be easier to forecast the future of a college like Juniata than that of our political and other institutions because of the understandable demands of each new generation—demands which must be met—for an educational program. Colleges and universities continue to operate even though governments fail or go through revolutionary changes. Their historic mission is to prepare each succeeding generation for a satisfying personal life and constructive citizenship.

As Juniata College prepares in 1975 for its second century, the following three fundamental questions arise for the faculty, the trustees, the administration and other friends of the College:

(1) Does Juniata College have an important and unique role to play for students and for our nation in higher education?

(2) Can the College, especially the faculty, adjust its teaching methods and course offerings to meet student and public demand in the coming decades?

(3) Are our difficult financial problems manageable?

A careful review of these issues will throw real light on the hurdles ahead as well as indicate what Juniata's future may be.

THE ROLE OF JUNIATA COLLEGE

The cardinal question is, of course, "Does Juniata College really have a unique contribution to make to its students and the well-being of our nation, or is it a non-essential institution, a mere vestige of response to past needs?" The answer to this question, I believe, is an emphatic Yes! It does have a most important contribution to make to individual students, as well as to the nation and the world.

Juniata is a small independent coeducational liberal arts college. Its progress is and has been in the offering of those courses which should develop leadership based on religious and moral values, a sensitive conscience, discipline, public responsibility and self-respect, as well as a respect for the rights of others. It aims at introducing students to a broad spectrum of life and instilling in them the wisdom to discern right from wrong and the courage to follow their best judgments. Such qualities are absolutely essential to the well-being of any democracy. Emphasis has been and is on the development of the individual student by studying great literature, the history of Greece and Rome, the Bible, poetry, philosophy, the physical sciences, political science, economics, mathematics, language and art. In addition, emphasis is placed on preparation for the learned professions—the ministry, law, education, medicine—and on study leading to the Ph.D. and other advanced degrees. There is much that has been excellent in this "educational fare" and our first requirement is to improve in every way the solid worth of these established emphases.

These objectives and courses have been the accepted "fare" during most of this period. They have been especially successful in the sciences and in the programs leading to the Ph.D. and the professions. Likewise, Juniata College and other institutions have stressed those indispensable objectives such as moral values, public responsibility and respect for others. Recently, the Watergate and other scandals, political "dirty tricks" and business chicanery involving many college-trained men, and above all, the period of violent student unrest during the 1960's, indicate the need for additional emphasis by colleges on their training programs for discipline, high standards and ethical conduct.

Or do these shocking revelations suggest that the previously accepted decent objectives may be outmoded, and that the old saying, "I'd rather be right than be President," is no longer operative, and that "nice guys finish last" will be the recognized code of the future?

Any cynical assumption that fundamental virtues are no longer needed in our present-day world would be most dangerous, indeed disastrous. Contrariwise, there is abundant evidence that the opposite conclusion would be true. The world-wide population explosion has multiplied our human relationship problems; nuclear weapons threaten the very existence of mankind; automation and computers tend to dehumanize our society; almost instantaneous communications limit the period for leadership reflection and thus magnify the need for prompt, courageous and honest decisions by leaders. In addition, many universities have become so large they have frequently lost personal interest in individual students.

It is clearly apparent that our nation, in the years ahead, must have wise leaders motivated by fundamental religious and humanistic principles—the true, comprehensive objectives of our liberal arts education—if our society is to endure. This indeed offers Juniata College, as well as all institutions of higher learning, an opportunity to play a unique role in our society. Their problem, therefore, is not simply do they have a key role to play, but rather will they have the vision, the vigor and imagination to meet these crucial and difficult demands. In reality, the liberal arts colleges have a great opportunity to influence individual students who could be future political, business, and professional leaders. This challenge lies near the heart of those serious problems facing our entire nation. Democracies will not be viable unless they have intelligent, courageous, honest leaders—men and women of unquestioned integrity.

Independent liberal arts colleges, of course, do not carry the entire responsibility of such training in our nation, nor are the great universities or state colleges freed from equal responsibility. All such institutions must have these true values as high priority objectives. The point I want to make is that small liberal arts colleges like Juniata, because of their size and lack of pressure for excessively wide programs which promise to be "all things to all students," have a very special opportunity to serve students and the nation.

PRESENT DAY DEMANDS

These conditions lead naturally to the second question. Can Juniata College meet effectively the demands for new teaching methods and new curricula? Students at Juniata College as well as elsewhere realize the serious worldwide problems which they and all in higher education face. In sports vernacular, a college education has become "a new ball game," and college administrators and faculties must recognize their new responsibilities and adjust to them or lose both student support and their historic role in our nation.

The best evidence of these new needs is the nationwide student demands apparent at Juniata as well as elsewhere. During the last decade there have been many straws in the wind indicating current public and student thinking about these requirements.

First and foremost, students want to be treated as individuals, not simply as "bodies" or numbers in a computer. The great size of certain universities makes this almost an impossibility, but this should not occur at medium or small-sized colleges like Juniata. Here it is a question of faculty and administration emphasis, interest and cooperation.

Unfortunately, in many small colleges the tradition of serving the individual student has all too often been overlooked. A substantial part of the nation-wide student unrest in the 1960's stemmed from the neglect of students and their needs by faculty and the poor communications that ensued. Students also want to be involved in the administration of a college and its regulation, as well as in the learning process. There is nothing wrong with this. These demands, frequently resented and criticized in past years, were legitimate, and in many places as at Juniata have been granted to the improvement of the college and to the benefit of students.

For years there has been criticism of course offerings, stressing their lack of relevance in today's world. Here, too, there often has been much merit in the complaints. Courses have been out-of-date and repetitious. The question of student involvement in administration also has often been misinterpreted. The trustees and faculty at Juniata faced this issue realistically and now have students serving on all important committees. In addition, students attend and participate in trustee, faculty and other meetings. Such participation by students has had a positive effect on many important decisions. Students' comments are welcomed, their advice heeded, and problems wisely solved. An influential trustee remarked after a tense committee meeting, "The students' comments were enlightening; they changed my thinking." Incidentally, student participation in college administration, curriculum planning and regulation can be a maturing and important educational experience for each student involved. One student committee member has remarked, "Being on that committee was one of the most enlightening experiences so far in my college years." At Juniata, real competition has developed among students for these committee assignments.

Certain courses also reflected the pattern of thought of past years and did not recognize changes in the modern world. In many institutions there have been and are too many courses—some offered simply because a faculty member has written his Ph.D. thesis in a certain area, not because it was an important course for students. In addition, new courses have been demanded, ones which would cover the great cultures of the East and Africa, as well as of the West. Students during the Viet Nam crisis developed deep interest in the study of peace and conflict, which would cause them to think about the solving of personal as well as international problems in conciliatory ways. The Wall Street Journal recently ran a feature article on these new courses: "To the Three R's You Can Now Append a P. It Stands for Peace. Scores of Colleges Add Majors in Peace and Conflict Studies."

Juniata must and is examining all new course demands. New attitudes are developing toward religion, and it is most reassuring to know that the J. Omar Good chair of religious studies has been established. This endowment brings to the College distinguished national and international religious leaders. Students and the College will be forever deeply indebted to Mr. and Mrs. Lester M. Rosenberger for arranging for this program based on the benefaction of the late J. Omar Good, alumnus and benefactor of Juniata. The impact of this new program may be most significant because here lies one of the great challenges to Juniata and similar educational institutions. A moral concern must permeate leadership everywhere, or dismal indeed is our future. Truth and justice are basic to an enduring society.

Every college has been or will be compelled by necessity to reorganize its course offerings. With these new courses also will come teaching techniques to supplement the old lecture methods. Most students want education of sound quality; they do not want simply to be "told," but desire to learn for themselves and to participate in the learning process. This will certainly mean more objective teaching, more participatory instruction and more groping for answers by students themselves.

Are the Juniata administrators and faculty preparing to meet these revolutionary academic challenges? They are; in fact, they already have done so! Juniata adopted a new overall liberal arts program introduced in 1971 after two years of study by faculty and students. This creative educational program re-emphasizes concern for the quality of teaching, for general education, for flexibility and student responsibility and for value-centered learning. This program, painstakingly worked out by a faculty-student committee, has earned positive student response and faculty enthusiasm—the best tests of any innovative venture. Its reception by outside professionals competent to judge its significance is also revealing. They have approved it enthusiastically. This new program already has attracted wide attention, and after careful study has merited grants in excess of $300,000 from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Juniata's new educational plan should reassure trustees, friends, alumni and students that the College is in the forefront of those institutions intelligently planning for the future.

FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

Are Juniata's financial problems desperate or insoluble? There is no question but that such problems today are serious in all colleges and universities. Inflation almost daily increases operating expenses of every kind, faculty salaries constantly rise and efforts to improve the quality of education inevitably involve increased costs. Simultaneously, competition for students from state colleges and universities, community colleges and technical institutes increases steadily. Tuition and other fees dare not rise drastically or Juniata will price itself out of the market.

Serious financial problems lie ahead, but the picture is not all dark. The vital mission of Juniata College for our society is being widely recognized and appreciated as never before. All state-approved institutions with low tuition fees, especially community colleges and technical institutes, are not directly competitive because they are extending education to many who never considered attending either liberal arts colleges or state universities. Friendly, cooperative relationships have developed between state-supported and privately financed institutions, both of which suffer from inflation. Direct and indirect financial aid is coming from state and federal bodies. With total costs of education rapidly rising and being better defined and understood, it may even become evident that state and federal aid to independent colleges like Juniata will be less expensive and even more effective than funneling all public support to large state institutions. Such aid must, however, never be permitted to undermine the policies of independent institutions.

Today we have better control over budgets and expenses than ever before, and we review all new proposals, expansion of any kind, with critical care. The close cooperation of trustees, students, faculty and administration is most constructive and makes possible prudent controls and cutbacks of expenses when necessary. The loyal financial support of Juniata alumni and friends is most encouraging and is essential for financial solvency.

Stable enrollments and adequate tuition income are essential for the financial well-being of all independent liberal arts colleges. Limited enrollments also permit careful planning and budgeting and protect a college from the vagaries of wide annual fluctuations in income. As certain universities have expanded to great size, parents and students alike began to recognize, as never before, the advantage of small colleges for certain types of students. Many students need personal attention and welcome close friendship with faculty; they also want to participate in extra-curricular activities such as athletics, theatricals and student government. In the smaller institutions all of these activities are possible; in the larger institutions such relationships for any sizable percentage of students are almost impossible. Parents have discovered that there is much more in going to college than attending classes and receiving grades. The size of Juniata College is ideal for many students.

Another indication of the loyal financial support the College and its administration will receive was the first student campaign within the Centennial Fund. In the spring of 1974, student volunteers received from their peers commitments exceeding $32,000 for the Centennial Fund!

I am optimistic about Juniata's financial future. If Juniata is prudently managed and controls its costs wisely, limits its enrollments and course offerings, continues its cooperative policies with trustees, faculty and students and builds its endowments, the financial problems will be manageable.

The New Curriculum: A Willingness to Question Tradition

by Dr. Donald T. Hartman

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Donald T. Hartman, newly-appointed Dean of Student Services, joined the Juniata faculty in 1968 as assistant professor of philosophy. He holds the bachelor of arts degree, magna cum laude, from Albright College and the master of arts and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Michigan. He has served as Juniata's director of summer sessions, as associate academic dean, and this year as dean of students. He is one of 40 Fellows in the 1975-76 Academic Administration Internship Program, sponsored by the American Council on Education, and was chosen from among some 180 nominees.

Dr. Hartman also served on the Task Force which drafted Juniata's current curriculum, with which the following article deals. In it he provides historical background, a glimpse of the concepts underlying the program, and detail concerning the program itself. He also notes important effects of the program's implementation, and explains what action Juniata will now take to keep her program strong. The article's inclusion in this publication—Dr. Stauffer's final presidential report—further underlines Juniata's advancement during "The Stauffer Years," 1968-75.

When in 1969 President Stauffer called for the formation of a committee to evaluate the curriculum, no one could have possibly foreseen the ultimate adoption of our current program or the graduation of its first class last spring. As a result of the President's action, however, seven faculty members and two students worked in consultation with faculty committees, in open hearings and in weekly and bi-weekly sessions for two and one-half years, developing the structure which became the "new curriculum." It was adopted by the faculty in the spring of 1971 and implemented that fall.

For the Task Force, the most time-consuming and difficult work was the complete development of an educational philosophy which would do three things: be sufficient to the needs of students in the 1970's, begin to meet the needs of contemporary society, and support the development of a world view, placing both individual and society in a larger context.

The Task Force eventually came to believe that the ultimate purpose of liberal education is to enable individuals to gain conscious and responsible control of their lives.

This insight—that liberal education is ultimately practically oriented—led to a broadened concept of disciplines, for while knowledge of facts is obviously necessary, such knowledge cannot be itself sufficient. To begin with, facts themselves are not value-free: how they are stated and grouped together represents previous judgments concerning which facts are important and which methods generate and organize them in revealing and instructive ways. Thus, the Task Force felt that an educated person should be able to evaluate different methods as appropriate for different purposes. In addition, if Juniata graduates knew only facts and not methodology, each day following graduation would leave them one day out of date in terms of factual knowledge. When they know methodology as well, however, they should be able to generate more facts as they need them.

What had been done in the past to teach methodology, the Task Force saw, was to teach facts and then hope that the various methods would become apparent. Moreover, methodology and technique were often identified as one, and it was assumed that only one method was acceptable. But regardless of the method one ought to use and regardless of the reasons for or against adopting various methods, the Task Force felt that a liberally educated individual (1) knows the issues involved in selecting appropriate modes, (2) can see the consequences of making different decisions regarding method, and (3) therefore understands the wider context within which facts are generated and organized.

There is more involved here, of course. Facts are not simply intellectual entities generated and organized by a method. To see them as such, as isolated from the rest of one's life, is still to see them as sterile. Facts are used in one's dealings in the world: they have applications. When one goes forth as a sociologist, economist or chemist, one does not simply generate facts or sit and think about them; one applies them in daily life. Given this view, and given the purpose of liberal education regarding control of one's life, it would seem to follow that one ought to be aware of the problems involved in such application.

One ought to be aware, for instance, of the kinds of professions and vocations available to people who specialize in these or those kinds of facts. Moreover, one ought to be able to deal intelligently with the kinds of moral problems raised in using facts in certain ways. One ought to be able to assess, finally, the consequences for his own life of engaging in activities which have to do with the application of those facts. One might call these areas the professional, moral and affective, but they all deal with applications of facts—their use or non-use—in daily life.

VALUE-CENTERED EDUCATION

Thus, in believing that facts cannot be isolated from the context in which they are generated and used, the Task Force believed that a liberally educated person should be able to evaluate this context. Ultimately, the concern for context—and the education which fosters that concern—came to be called value-centered. “Value” is used broadly, following Dewey, to include intellectual as well as moral values. One expresses a value, then, not only when asserting that something is part of the good life, but when looking out a window. One does not see everything there is to see, but selects those things worth seeing. One's values lead him to see what he sees and avoid the things he doesn't.

In looking at what Juniata and other institutions had been doing, the Task Force found that while the purpose of liberal education was relatively constant, the means employed to achieve that goal were quite different. The concept of a broad education, for example, meant teaching a student to be critical by simply confronting him with competing sets of values and hoping he would try to reconcile the differences. The Task Force saw this method as much too indirect, feeling there ought to be a course which specifically and critically analyzes different modes of perception and thought. The title Modes of Thought and Methods of Inquiry was chosen.

In the course, students are acquainted with different modes of thought and methodologies—especially those appropriate to the different disciplines—so that they can do two things: evaluate the acceptability and desirability of a given mode in relation to particular human problems or activities (and, if necessary, choose between conflicting modes); and assess the one or two modes with which they work best, thereby being better able to plan future educational pursuits. What an individual learns in Modes should be something he retains throughout his collegiate career. As he enters specific courses, he should be able to see the methodological presumptions being made by that course, by that faculty member, and by that area of inquiry. He should be able to assess the strengths and weaknesses of that mode and begin to see alternatives to it. Moreover, he should be able to use the knowledge thus gained to generate his own program of study.

This program of study—the Program of Emphasis—consists of 15 units which the student sees as constituting a conceptual whole. It corresponds roughly to the traditional “major,” but is much broader in concept. There are no departmental requirements, and “units” include not only classroom courses but credit by examination, independent study, field work and internships. Each student constructs his own Program in consultation with two advisors, one of whom is usually his Freshman Seminar instructor, and submits a list of at least 10 units in his freshman year. His 15-unit Program of Emphasis must be accepted by the end of his junior year, but changes may be made at any time, subject to approval by the two advisors and the Program Committee.

Programs of Emphasis have included such titles as "Pre-Medicine," "Elementary Education," "French Language and Literature," and a wide variety of others—some more and some less traditional. Often, Programs are developed around vocational goals, while others center on intellectual themes, dealing specifically with certain bodies of knowledge students seek to master. Only rarely, however, will courses be drawn from only one department. Programs more commonly drawn from at least two departments and sometimes from as many as five or six.

The Program of Emphasis, however, constitutes only part of a student's total study. As a follow-up to Modes of Thought, he will also take value-centered units (VCUs) which deal with the intellectual and moral values related to the Program. Thus, a student interested in geology might take a VCU exploring the economic principles governing the use of the world's minerals. Similarly, a student in economics might take units raising questions about the rationality of man or the social responsibility of economists.

As the student gains awareness of the value questions related to an area of study, he also begins to become aware of similar problems faced by other people in other times. Human Existence-Historical units then acquaint him with cultural contexts within which different solutions were found. It is felt that if the student can analyze the cultural and intellectual parameters of another time, discovering why other men did what they did, he should later be better able to analyze his own cultural situation. To see oneself objectively, one must see others objectively. Human Existence-Historical units are designed to fulfill this need.

After taking two of these "HEH" units, the student moves on to Human Existence-Analytical, where he is asked to analyze not why someone else did the things he did, but why the student is doing the things he does. Why does he want to become a doctor? What does he believe are the values he will realize in so doing? How does he justify it? Ultimately, the long track through Modes, VCUs, the Program of Emphasis, HEH and HEA will issue in the Program Review. In this culminating effort, the student is asked to evaluate his total experience at Juniata in terms of his discipline, his values, his vocational goals and his life purposes—all within the context of structure he proposes to his faculty advisors.

EARLY UNCERTAINTY

The new program was implemented in the fall of 1971, beginning with the freshman class. Freshmen understood why the Writing Program was given a high priority: if you want to communicate clearly, you should be able to write analytically and clearly. At the same time, students were involved with faculty advisors in the Freshman Seminars—small group situations initially frustrating for many freshmen and faculty alike. Both were placed in situations in which non-traditional behavior was required, and traditional expectations went unfulfilled. As one of the purposes of the Seminar is to bring faculty and students closer together, however, mutual frustration in that first year did serve a positive end: while many participants do not remember now just what they talked about that fall, they do remember with whom they talked.

Modes of Thought, on the other hand, was a different story. It was the first time any of us had really tried anything like it. Students perceived uncertainty—and they were right. For while Juniata's goals were admirable, we were not certain that the things we were doing were the right means for achieving our end. What success Modes had in the first year resulted from sheer energy and optimism; now, after four years of both Modes and the Freshman Seminar, the elusive means are much more clearly conceived.

EARLY BENEFICIAL EFFECTS

The most immediate effect of this whole process—of developing and implementing a new curriculum—was to focus the entire college community's attention on the purpose of liberal education and its relation to value-centered studies. For example, the Academic Program Committee was required to provide a definition of value-centered units and continually articulate it with the faculty. The Academic Standards Committee had to develop new criteria for courses which dealt with non-traditional subject matter. Faculty advisors, in providing guidance for the newly developing Program of Emphasis, soon found that advice which worked for the "major" was no longer adequate.

All this activity required constant interaction among students, faculty and various committees to develop new concepts. If persons felt like guinea pigs it was understandable; old habits were not sufficient within the new context. It was continually necessary to rethink the purpose and techniques of liberal education. In asking students to think about their lives, we soon began thinking about our own lives as well.

Another early outstanding effect was the significant vote of confidence from the National Endowment for the Humanities, coming in the form of a $340,000 grant for support of faculty and other development. The effects of the grant are almost inseparable from the day-to-day effects of adopting the new curriculum. We have experienced, for instance, a renewed emphasis on the nature, purposes and techniques of teaching. Faculty are experimenting with guided design and small group discussion sessions; the economics department has developed courses around case studies; the HEH and Modes staffs have developed means by which lectures and small group discussions can be used in the same course most beneficially. At the same time, individual faculty members have learned much about the dynamics of teaching through the Freshman Seminars, and students have found them more receptive to questions of how one goes about teaching.

With adoption of the 10-week calendar, further, many faculty members have had to rewrite entire courses, resulting in less sureness at the beginnings of terms. Moreover, it appears that students are involved in the actual construction of the courses, and more sense of student-faculty partnership prevails.

The effects of the new curriculum, however, are not only to be found in the classroom. The college has devoted much time to discussion of vocations, with many representatives of various fields discussing with students the values they attempt to achieve through their lives, the personal values realized, and the kinds of preparation appropriate. Faculty members have read papers on teaching within their specific areas. The Student Government evaluations of teaching have also increased in import, and students are asking deep, serious and significant questions about what goes on in the classroom. The students, moreover, are not only sharing that information with each other—they are enabling the faculty to improve its performance.

Even where the faculty is not directly involved on a daily basis—as in dormitory life—there have been positive effects. While more liberal rules governing dormitory life are certainly a national trend, the philosophy of the new curriculum calls for and establishes the responsibility which must accompany that greater freedom. If students are asked to be in greater charge of their academic lives, they ought to be in greater charge of their lives beyond the strictly academic sphere—given sufficient demonstration of responsibility.

Students have also shown considerable maturity in serving on various committees, and in accepting the responsibilities which accompany that service. They are generally more open than they would be within traditional structures, and express and argue their opinions well. The new curriculum, then, seems to have aided in bringing about a more articulate expression of the students' point of view, and student interests are being more efficiently represented day by day. This growing openness and willingness to assume responsibility, incidentally, has shown itself in the academic sphere, where requests for independent studies increase yearly.

WHERE TO NEXT

If, to this point, we have concentrated on developing and implementing the new curriculum, the coming year must be one of evaluation. We must assess the effectiveness of the whole and of its parts, as well as using and understanding the impact it has had on student, faculty, and administrative lives. We can sense the positive workings of the program, but we need to transform these intuitive perceptions into concrete facts. This process will involve many persons—the Commission to Plan for Juniata's Future, the faculty subcommittee on evaluation, the Student Government faculty evaluation committee, and various parts of the administration.

The measure of success of the new curriculum will be its preservation in broad outlines after the evaluation, while Juniata's strength will be revealed in her willingness to make any necessary changes. A recent study placed Juniata among the top eight percent of the nation's colleges and universities in terms of scholarly production. The study also found that one feature typical of the leading institutions was a willingness to question tradition. We have done so before at Juniata, and have met with success. If and when further changes are needed to further strengthen our program, there is little doubt we will question and progress again.

 Juniata College
 hereby give public expression to their Profound Gratitude and Esteem for those who have established
 Significant Endowments in Support of Teaching

These endowments enable Juniata College to emphasize teaching as the essential element in liberal arts education. The quality of learning by Juniata students is advanced for all the years to come by these benefactions.

The Herbert A. and Marjorie F. Miller Endowment in Support of Teaching in Economics and Business Administration, 1971.

The Edith B. Wertz Endowment in Support of Teaching in the Humanities, 1972.

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professorship of Evangelical Christianity, 1974.

Joseph R. and Jane S. Good Endowment in Support of Scholarships.

Dr. John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker Endowment in Support of Peace Studies.

The Board of Trustees of Juniata College has approved a plan for the recognition of major endowment gifts. Recognizing that liberal arts education is dependent upon sound teaching, the Trustees seek to give special recognition to gifts of $100,000 or more. These may be direct gifts or gifts through bequests or gift annuities in which the actual amount available for support of teaching through endowment in perpetuity is of the amount stipulated. These major gifts are recognized here and also through presentation of special citations to the donors and through the erection of bronze plaques which are placed in the classroom areas occupied by the designated departments.

FOUNDERS CLUB MEMBERSHIP

Since its origin in 1939, the Founders Club has had as its special mission the development of leadership gifts which are essential to the advancement of the educational effectiveness of Juniata College. Its membership has grown to 893 during the 1974-75 college year. There are three categories of annual membership: the Thousand Club, open to those who contribute $1,000 or more; the Five Hundred Club, for those who contribute between $500 and $999; and the Hundred Club, for those who contribute from $100 to $499.

The College recognizes with pride the significance of support generated by Founders Club membership. Indeed, the future effectiveness of Juniata depends upon leadership gifts of this magnitude. You are cordially invited to join these other Juniatians as members of the Founders Club, an organization held in special esteem by all who are associated with the College.

BEQUESTS—$27,229.99

The following bequests were made to Juniata during the 1974-75 fiscal year.

Pearl S. Appleby

A lifetime resident of Mt. Union, Mrs. James D. Appleby, formerly Pearl V. Shearer, Business '08, named Juniata in her will. During the past year, payments were made on the final settlement of the estate. Her husband, a member of the Business class of 1899, was the cashier of the First National Bank in Mt. Union.

Mary Bertha Evans

A native of Huntingdon and a member of the class of 1899, Miss Mary Bertha Evans left a bequest as a memorial to her parents, Dr. and Mrs. M. R. Evans. A serious student of art and painting, Miss Evans studied at the Art Institute in Chicago and the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. A number of her paintings are included in the Juniata collection. Her sister, the late Lillian Evans '20, was the College librarian from 1918-52.

Hulda E. Naus

In September, 1974, the College received a bequest from the estate of Hulda E. Naus, formerly Hulda E. Stuckey, Business '19. She and her husband, S. Paul Naus, lived in both Floutertown and Bedford, where they were active members of the Church of the Brethren.

J. F. Oller

A member of a distinguished family which has been associated with Juniata since its founding, Jefford F. Oller left a bequest to the College. Mr. Oller was a member of the Board of Trustees from 1966 until his death on July 27, 1974. An outstanding athlete at Juniata, he maintained, following his graduation in 1918, a lifelong interest in athletics. Mr. Oller resided with his wife Anne in Waynesboro, Pa., where he was a director of the Landis Machine Company and treasurer of the Wayne Building Company.

Fannie G. Reichard

A resident of Hagerstown, Md., a member of the Hagerstown Church of the Brethren, and a friend of Juniata, Mrs. Fannie G. Reichard left a bequest for the College in her will. During the past fiscal year, payments were made on the final settlement of her estate.

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Shellenberger

Final settlement on the estate of the late John E. Shellenberger and Beulah Cresswell Shellenberger, Academy 1910, of Huntingdon, was made during the past fiscal year. This fund, now amounting to $62,964.24, was established in 1972.

Elda O. Wertz

Preparing for the Second Century, Juniata's Seven-Year Advance, 1968-75

The academic year 1974-75 was a time of special awareness of Juniata's unique worth. In this, our College's 99th year, when we stood at the threshold of a new century of service, we have had a deep sense of gratitude for all those persons who have gone before—each one who has poured his or her life into this beloved institution. Turning to the future, we look eagerly and willingly to the opportunities and demands of Juniata's second century.

And we have prepared gladly for new leadership in the person of Dr. Frederick M. Binder, the College's eighth president. As the 99th year ended, I was thankful for Dr. Binder's availability, which made it possible for me to step down from the presidency and into a role which will permit a personal regimen in keeping with my physician's advice. In all of this, I want to express deep thanks to the Board of Trustees for the fact that during the next few years I shall, as President Emeritus, be able to serve the College in a continuing and appropriately limited role. I want to help to assure Juniata's future usefulness by working for the added financial strengthening that is constantly needed.

I have deep faith in the ideals and values—the underlying commitments—of Juniata College. I am confident that the College's full worth is yet to be realized. The following statement, prepared for the most recent Juniata catalog, is an expression of my own faith and confidence which have grown steadily since I came here as a freshman in 1932:

Juniata College is a strangely wonderful institution. As Juniata moves into its second century on April 17, 1976, I know that the College will be determined to continue fulfilling this description.

Each year in the life of the College is an act of faith. New students place the promise of their lives in the hands of faculty members whom they do not know. Yet some of these men and women of the faculty are destined to become heroes and models who profoundly affect a student in each day he lives thereafter.

An independent college is an act of faith financially. Every year, Juniata spends approximately one-third more on its educational program than the amount paid by students and their parents. Alumni, trustees and many other friends—including friends of the past through endowment funds—give generously so that each new year of service to students may be fulfilled. In addition, there are excellent facilities provided by friends of previous years who built buildings on the campus; these we use, almost forgetting previous generosity.

Above all, the campus provides the setting for the vital encounter of the minds of students with those of faculty members. This encounter, with value beyond measure, is based upon the dedicated effort and unselfish service of faculty and staff.

Juniata and similar colleges are strangely wonderful in the idealism expressed by their purposes, and in the dedication that these purposes elicit from a wide variety of constituents. Thousands of persons—students above all—have enriched their own lives through identification with Juniata's ideals. Juniata would not exist as a free and independent institution without thousands of constituents who contribute in untold ways—sincere concern, money, love, intellect, defense of academic freedom, selfless dedication—to the fulfillment of the College's purposes.

A clear mark of Juniata is its total altruism. The primary beneficiary is each student as a person, with all the worth and dignity that humane learning can create. The ultimate beneficiaries are the people of the world who are served through knowledge and understanding, and from the motivation which the Juniata experience engenders. Thus it is that Juniata helps students to make their lives rich in meaning and accomplishment.

I trust that Juniata will go on being strangely wonderful and yet adapting to each new circumstance which arises as the College moves in and through its second century. Here is a wellspring of learning from which students may draw to the fullest without depleting the resources of knowledge and wisdom which are here for all to share.

On the following page is a brief summary of significant developments in the life of Juniata College in the seven-year period, 1968-75. We have been fortunate that thousands of the College's leaders and constituents have poured out their generous support and unfailing concern. Thus the College has advanced on many fronts simultaneously; only in this way can true progress be made. The major categories of advancement are now amplified.

Students

Juniata has been and must be, above all else, student-centered. Concern for students as individual human beings of measureless worth has actuated Juniata from the beginning.

This concern is part of the unique ethos of the College, and this environment, conducive to intellectual and personal growth, is what students seek when they enroll. This environment created especially by dedicated faculty must be perpetuated if the best of Juniata is to become the heritage of future generations.

A college, to survive significantly, must be capable of constant adaptation to changing circumstances and demands. During the most recent seven years all American colleges have moved from the turmoil of the late 1960's to the financial stresses and uncertainties of the mid-1970's. The demands of a changing society have not always been pleasant or in keeping with the preferences of many persons, but on the whole the responses of students have been commendable and promising. Although no other seven years in the College's history have seen the need for such extensive adaptation, Juniata has come through admirably. Students as participants in the processes of change have joined with leaders among trustees, faculty, alumni, and administration in assuring our capacity to serve a dynamic and free society.

Juniata has always been highly self-critical and I trust that this characteristic will not be lost. Coupled with this is a restless desire to work for self-improvement. There has been little, if any, tendency toward complacency or deluding self-satisfaction. Let it be said, however, that when knowledgeable, objective and disinterested visitors view Juniata in reasonable depth they are inclined, with encouraging

JUNIATA COLLEGE Significant Developments in Seven Years 1968-75

Reformation of liberal arts program, marked by the Faculty's introduction in 1971 of creative new educational effort—renewed concern for quality of teaching and advising, for conception of general education, for flexibility and student responsibility and for value-centered learning. This program has elicited highly positive student response coupled with notable faculty enthusiasm. The new program has merited grants to exceed $340,000 for program, faculty and library development from the National Endowment for the Humanities. More than two-thirds of the faculty are participating directly in the new curriculum; more than one-half have already engaged in faculty development programs to insure success of this new educational effort.

Reorganization of Board of Trustees and adoption of new by-laws; independence of College asserted.

Revision of administrative function; all chief administrative offices filled with new appointees and virtually all second-level administrative positions restaffed; excellent young administrative team ready for further advances.

Marked improvement of budgetary situation from a serious problem in 1968-69 to substantial correction in the second year and in-the-black operation for the last five years; revamping of budgetary and control procedures, including broadened participation and responsibility.

Maintenance of stable enrollment with 1148 opening 1968-69 and 1158 opening 1974-75 (see text of report); increase of 62% in current operations budget from $3.28-million to $5.32-million for the same period.

Advance of gross assets by 51% from $15.5-million to $23.5-million, including endowment and annuity fund growth of 165% from $2.8-million to $7.3-million (book value).

Building of new college center and four small residential units; acquisition of a nature preserve of 170 acres, a recreational site of 55 acres near Lake Raystown and, by lease, a biological field station of 385 acres on Lake Raystown.

Introduction of Annual Support Fund in 1969, with growth from $115,000 in 1969-70 to $130,000 in 1974-75; in 1974-75, 49% of Juniata's alumni participated in giving programs (Annual Support and Centennial Fund) as compared with 35% in 1968-69.

Establishment in July, 1973, of Commission to Plan for Juniata's Future; select trustee, faculty, alumni, student and community representatives charged with setting directions for the College's second century.

Raising of $5.3-million in capital funds in five years, ending June 30, 1973.

Launching of the Juniata Centennial Fund with a primary objective of at least $5-million for added endowment; more than $3.2-million in gifts and assurances received since October, 1973. Action underway to raise additional $1.8-million by autumn, 1976. In 1974-75, total support received by Juniata from all sources exceeded the $2-million mark for first time in history.

Marked extension of faculty and student involvement in college affairs with evidence of increased responsibility, commitment and helpfulness as the beneficial results.

Plans are in progress to make 1975-76 the high-water mark in the cultural and intellectual life of the campus through the Juniata College Centennial Observances.

frequency, to commend what they find even to the point of registering their own pleasant surprise. Frequently, such affirmative comments include students in a most gratifying way.

All that follows is aimed at serving well the needs of students who elect to pursue their studies here. But let it not be forgotten that students are at once Juniata's most precious assets and her reason for being. It is valid to say that a college's role is to serve both students and society, whether nation-wide or world-wide, but fulfillment of societal needs is accomplished primarily through the lives of students. Students are Juniata's central concern.

Faculty

There is an opinion, widely shared by those most qualified to judge, that Juniata today enjoys the benefits of the best faculty ever to be assembled here. There were always great and dedicated men and women who poured out their lives in service to Juniata students. Today the concentration of such persons is greater than ever before; they reach into more departments and into such important areas of the curriculum as general education, inter-disciplinary activities, independent study, and student participation in faculty research.

The past seven years have seen in a dramatic way an ever-widened participation by faculty in college affairs with concomitant sharing of responsibility for fulfillment of the College's purposes. This is especially true, as is to be expected, in the total educational endeavor, but it extends also to renewal and refinement of institutional purpose, campus life beyond the classroom, and such essential functions as student recruitment, public relations, fund-raising and budgetary control.

In 1969 the faculty responded in a most notable way to my call for reexamination, reformation, and fundamental renewal of the curriculum. The eagerness of faculty leaders to pursue this challenge reflected their own impatient desire to meet changing student and societal needs while reaffirming in philosophy and in practice Juniata's historic commitment to liberal learning. To do this, the faculty formed the Task Force on the Juniata Program which spent two years of unremitting effort in creating the College's new academic program. The faculty as a whole was widely involved, and very early in the process student participation was invited and received. These were far more than pro forma arrangements; faculty and students engaged in a dynamic effort which eventually ensured the success that the new academic program has enjoyed since initial implementation in 1971. A special debt is owed to the students of the Class of 1975, who not only served as pioneers but made remarkably helpful contributions to the steady refinement of the program. Clearly, the Juniata campus is a more exhilarating place than it was prior to the new program. Students and faculty together have discovered that learning is enhanced when a college is in a state of becoming, i.e. when they are sharing the benefits of being creative, which, according to one definition, is "having the quality of something created rather than imitated."

In the spring of 1972, while the new program was in its first year, we were visited by a group of three persons assigned by the National Endowment for the Humanities. During the visit itself there were some very encouraging remarks about the new program, but in due course more tangible results were forthcoming. Approximately $340,000 has been received to assist us in implementing the new program. Emphasis was placed upon three categories; faculty development, library development and the provision of facilities and equipment needed in newly-developed courses. Beyond the obvious advances which were made possible by the NEH grants, there was noticeable value in the encouragement and reassurance—the confirmation of the worth of the new program—that NEH's helpful action engendered.

The autumn of 1972 was the time for the regular ten-year review by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. A team of eight persons conducted the review and reported to the Commission on Higher Education of MSA. As always, the major benefit was found in the self-evaluation which preceded the visit and in the several days of in-depth discussion which faculty members and administrators enjoyed with colleagues from other colleges and universities. Juniata's new program was given close scrutiny which resulted in valuable suggestions and, again, a strong sense of confirmation. The MSA review culminated in the anticipated ten-year extension of accreditation without qualification or special condition.

Throughout this period the faculty was engaged in its own self-renewal with improvement of by-laws, committee structure and general organization. This has included regular and significant participation by students in faculty affairs and by students and faculty members in trustee affairs. Recent years have seen broad extension of faculty responsibilities and of highly effective fulfillment of their new roles.

The pulsing beat of campus life is energized by a very substantial number of faculty who are committed to the constant advancement of the quality of Juniata College in service to her students.

Academic Life

Juniata's academic life has long been characterized by seriousness of purpose, an unremitting concern for quality and vitality, and constant seeking after the ideals of the liberal arts. In these days of excessive vocationalism on many fronts, Juniata seeks, as always, a healthy balance between professional and vocational education on the one hand and liberal learning on the other. Juniata would not be Juniata without value-centered and balanced attention to the learned disciplines, with full focus upon the integrative benefits of general education and with a particular concern for humanistic studies. Education at Juniata is aimed at the totality of life, of which one's career is an acknowledged and responsible part, and in which one's usefulness and personal fulfillment are essential elements. Juniata emphasizes a view of life which is value-centered, in which work in service to mankind is an integral part of the whole, and in which the quality of humane living is each person's ultimate concern.

The commitment of faculty and the response of students have already been described as potent forces for the success of Juniata's academic program. The support of trustees and alumni is equally important and is present in good measure. Financial support which is urgently required and well supplied will be discussed later. At this point it is with gratitude that I acknowledge the intellectual and moral support which is given by the primary off-campus constituents. Alumni and trustees provide encouragement for creativity and constructive change and, most fundamental of all, there is unfailing support of the academic freedom without which a college of Juniata's commitments cannot exist.

Recent years have seen a number of encouraging developments which provide supplemental benefits to students beyond those of the new academic program. These include the following:

The program in Peace and Conflict Studies was first established in 1974-75 with the encouragement and support of Dr. John C. and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Baker. This interdisciplinary program will be a continuing expression of a deep concern for world peace, which is a part of Juniata's heritage.

The J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professorship in Evangelical Christianity was created with the guidance of Mr. and Mrs. Lester M. Rosenberger and with funds derived from the estate of the late Mr. J. Omar Good, Juniata alumnus and benefactor. This Professorship will provide elective courses which are also expressive of Juniata's tradition.

Attention is now being given to ways in which Juniata can provide educational benefits to the people of Huntingdon County and the surrounding area. As early as the 1920's, Juniata was referred to as "The College of the Juniata Valley," and for all of its history the College has had a mutually beneficial relationship with its neighbors. In a rich variety of ways, Juniata has been a cultural resource far beyond the campus boundaries, and educational dividends will now also be made available. A well developed program of continuing education for citizens of all ages, including those who come to use the recreational facilities of Lake Raystown, can benefit people vocationally, intellectually, and culturally. The economy of the area will also be a significant beneficiary.

Consortial arrangements have been explored and in some instances established. For more than a decade, Juniata has participated in the Brethren Colleges Abroad Program. Composed of six colleges with historic ties to the Church of the Brethren, this group operates year-abroad centers in Marburg, Strasbourg and Barcelona. Additional substantial benefit is received from the Area College Library Cooperative, which pools the library holdings of seventeen colleges and universities and facilitates research by both students and faculty. In the years immediately ahead, Juniata will be advantaged by added relationships of this kind. Special efforts will be required, since Juniata is farther removed geographically from other independent liberal arts colleges than any other such institution in the Commonwealth. Advantages to be achieved in this area include curricular enrichment, savings in instructional costs, and some increases in revenue production, among others.

One such effort which has been explored during the past three years involves the concept of a regional community college in Huntingdon, Blair, Cambria, Fulton, Bedford, and Somerset Counties. If this plan is ever to be pursued, it would require tax funds from state and regional sources and would involve the use of faculty and facilities of most or all of seven institutions, including three private colleges, two proprietary schools, and branch campuses of two Commonwealth Universities. It will be necessary to weigh advantages versus possible disadvantages to Juniata, and our continuing independence must be assured as a pre-condition to participation. With this caveat, it must be added that in the program now being explored there are substantial opportunities for leadership and service.

It has been generally agreed that optimal enrollment for Juniata in the present era is in the 1200-1300 range. This level would best utilize the present physical facilities without overcrowding and would assure revenue to fit the present program and size of faculty. Unfortunately, we have encountered some losses in recent years which call for a more effective program of student recruitment with a related advance in effective use of financial aid funds. Particular attention must be given to factors related to the College's geographical setting; there are potentially positive factors which must be accentuated and certain noticeable problems related to isolation for which compensatory solutions must be found. (At this writing, it is good to say that new admissions efforts under the guidance of President Frederick M. Binder are showing promising results.)

Board of Trustees

Juniata is blessed with a Board of Trustees which is zealous about assuring the College's independence and high academic quality. There is evidence of a steady desire to keep Juniata in the mainstream of American independent liberal arts education and unfailing concern for maintaining and enhancing Juniata's unique qualities. Furthermore, the trustees have a record of demonstrated performance in providing personally and in procuring from others the funds needed to accomplish the institution's purposes. The Board shows, also, abundant motivation and leadership to provide the environment of freedom necessary for Juniata's full effectiveness as an institution dedicated to the liberation of the human mind and spirit.

Late in 1968, a special committee of the Board of Trustees began the preparation of new by-laws which had three basic purposes: general modernization, including guarantee of an open campus; assurance of the Board's—and thereby the College's—indepen-dence; structure and function of the Board and its committees to improve the work of the Board and its outcomes. The new by-laws were adopted unanimously in the spring of 1969, and the intervening six and one-half years have amply demonstrated the wisdom and worth of this forward-looking action.

On two subsequent occasions minor adjustments in the by-laws were approved. In 1975, the Board approved and authorized suitable legal action for the amendment of the College Charter. This placed solely in the hands of the Board any action which may in the future be taken with respect to the College's dissolution. In such an eventuality, the institution's assets shall be assigned to non-profit educational purposes as determined by the Board and as further approved by the appropriate court. This amendment of the Charter was voted in order further to establish the College's independence and to provide legal evidence thereof.

In 1971, the Board of Trustees adopted a memorandum to invite faculty and students to select from among their respective members persons who would sit with the various committees of the Board. These groups were in turn invited to select two faculty members and two students (plus the President of Student Government) to sit with the Board of Trustees in its regular meetings. Within this brief compass, let it simply be said that the reader is most likely to underestimate the highly positive benefits derived from this development.

Administration

It has been the purpose of this administration to facilitate teaching, learning and research. This requires that, with the support of the Board of Trustees, the administration must assure an environment of freedom as the primary element in the vital encounter between faculty and students. Further, the administration has endeavored to lead the institution in responding to new circumstances, demands, and opportunities, and thereby to assure that an ever-evolving institution may be able to join in and to affect positively a changing world society. The administration has been committed also to the indispensable endeavor of seeking full support—intellectual, moral, and financial—for the entire College Community. Let the importance of financial support not be diminished; the objectives are not crass. Full financial support is necessary not only for provision of facilities and services but above all else for the provision of adequate compensation of faculty and staff. It is by this means that we assure high quality of persons and of programs.

Financial Resources

Juniata's financial management has been improved substantially in two crucial ways. New budget and control procedures were introduced in the 1969-70 fiscal year, thus assuring better informed and more timely management actions than were previously possible. Support of this effort was given by the establishment under new by-laws of a Budget Committee of the Board of Trustees; this committee has focused solely upon obtaining the best possible qualitative results from the funds available. This administration-trustee effort was supported in a most helpful way through budget building and implementation by administrative officers, department chairmen, and others who were made responsible for budget centers. It is important to note that these centers relate directly to organizational structure and function.

The second crucial element in improvement of financial management was the establishment in 1969, under the new trustee by-laws, of a newly empowered Committee on Finance and Investment. Juniata is fortunate in having a number of trustees who are highly knowledgeable in the investment field. The newly structured committee has provided substantial improvement in endowment income while fully assuring fiduciary responsibility.

The accompanying tables provide comparative data on current operations in 1967-68 and 1974-75, and on assets and liabilities at the conclusion of these same fiscal years.

With reference to Current Fund Budgets, 1967-68 and 1974-75, the growth over the seven year period was 62%. A reduction in gift funds results from the fact that more gifts were assigned to capital purposes, both endowment and plant. The advance in endowment income results from increased corpus and from improved investment results, thanks to the new trustee committee mentioned above. Notable increase in revenue from government sources is illustrative of a new trend, which calls for vigilance to ensure acceptance only of those funds which do not interfere with institutional independence. The most recent major advance in this area during 1974-75 was the provision of some $120,000 as an Institutional Assistance Grant under a law enacted in the summer of 1974 by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Any approved independent college or university in Pennsylvania was eligible to apply for a share of a one-year appropriation in the amount of $12-million.

It may be noted in the table entitled "Comparative Assets and Liabilities—1968 and 1975" that gross assets increased 51% from June 30, 1968 to June 30, 1975, and that for the same period net assets increased 69%. At both times the major liability has been plant debt, most of which is being amortized under long-term federal loans. This form of indebtedness reached its peak in 1970, when the East

Houses were completed and the amortization of those residence halls was begun. A further observation relates to the presence of the Pooled Income Fund in 1975. This fund was established in the early 1970's to encourage deferred gifts under life income contracts. Future pledges, as well as those now pending under the Juniata Centennial Fund, will lead to further increases either in direct endowment gifts or through the various forms of deferred gifts, especially gift annuities and gifts under life-income contracts. The most pressing need now and in the future is substantial endowment growth. This quantitative concern is directed toward urgent qualitative objectives, mainly educational enrichment and financial strength and stability.

Leading Resources and Facilities

Juniata is fortunate in the quality and condition of its campus buildings. Particularly significant advances in plant were made in the 1950's and 1960's during the distinguished presidency of Dr. Calvert N. Ellis. With the completion in 1969 of Ellis Hall, an excellent college center, and of the East Houses, four apartment-type residence halls, in 1970, it was noted that 85% of the total square footage of campus buildings had been completed since 1950. Notable development of academic facilities included Beeghly Library (1962), Brumbaugh Science Center (1965), and Good Hall (1968). A remaining need is a building for the Humanities Division on a par with Good Hall (social sciences) and Brumbaugh (physical and natural sciences). Here again the constituents of the College are to be commended for providing the support which made these advances possible.

Juniata's two libraries, Beeghly Library for the general collection and the Myers Science Library in the Brumbaugh Science Center, are attractive and highly functional and provide study areas for 400 and 40 students respectively. In addition to an ample supply of microfilms, recordings, maps and charts, there are presently 175,000 volumes and 831 current periodicals in the two libraries. These numbers have advanced in seven years from 103,000 volumes and 721 current periodicals.

Three land acquisitions of note occurred during the seven years under review here. In 1970, the Baker-Henry Nature preserve was acquired for development as a place for both nature study and recreation. This 170-acre site, all within the Borough of Huntingdon, is located less than one-third of a mile from the eastern edge of the main campus. In 1973, we were able to obtain a 55-acre site to be developed for student recreation near the Seven Points Recreation Area on the new Lake Raystown. This was purchased to replace the 36-acre parcel which Mr. Emory Zook bequeathed to the College and which was taken in 1972, with appropriate reimbursement, by the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, as part of the development of the new lake. The 55-acre plot is to be known as the Emory Zook Campground.

A highly significant third addition is the leasing from the Corps of Engineers, at token cost, of 385 acres located east of Marklesburg on Lake Raystown. This is to be used as a field station by appropriately interested and qualified faculty and students, as well as guest scientists. This will make possible both terrestrial and aquatic research for several interested departments. Possible also will be limnological studies beneficial for optimal management of the lake and public interpretation and instruction on ecological factors relating to the lake and the region in which it is located. Juniata has here a great opportunity for public service and for selective extension of its programs—educational, cultural, scientific, and recreational—in relation to the hundreds of thousands of persons who will be coming to Lake Raystown in the years ahead.

Planning

Planning is an ongoing process involving all of the key segments of the campus community and of the off-campus constituencies. Of special interest are two planning studies. The first was specially approved by the trustees and is known as the Commission to Plan for Juniata's Future. The membership includes trustees, faculty, students, alumni and a representative of the general public, with administrators as resource persons. The chairman is Mr. Charles C. Ellis, alumnus and trustee, who is also chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board of Trustees. The group is engaged in preparing well integrated plans which will guide the major areas of college endeavor as Juniata moves into the beginning of its second century.

Also nearing completion is a master plan for campus development. A highly qualified landscape architect and planner has been working in consultation with trustees, faculty, students, building and grounds people, alumni and administration. Based upon thoughtful study of both the aesthetic and the functional aspects of the campus, the report, which has been approved in principle by the Board of Trustees, provides a specific plan for beautification and functional improvement. Facilities which would further enrich the life of the campus have been identified; these include a building or buildings for arts and humanities, indoor and outdoor recreation facilities for women and men (field house, swimming pool, skating rink, and added fields and courts for outdoor sports) and the rebuilding of Founders Hall.

Resource Development

As is evident from what has preceded, Juniata knows that its human resources are most precious, but that material resources—funds and facilities—are indispensable if a College is to continue its teaching, humanizing work. As one lives and works in the Juniata environment, it becomes abundantly clear that material resources are converted into intellectual, social and spiritual values in the lives of students. Finite assets become infinite in worth through the processes of human growth and learning. It is clear then that adequate funds that are wisely and effectively used make possible the high quality of educational experience that we desire for Juniata's students.

There is, therefore, no apology for the directness and candor with which the loyal Juniata constituencies have been approached for their material support. Their magnificent response demonstrates clearly that they believe in Juniata and that they want to guarantee its high quality and its future as a free and independent college dedicated to liberal learning. They wish to bequeath to the students of the second century that which they have found beneficial in the first.

Juniata's most notable advance in monetary resources is documented elsewhere in this bulletin. For all that has been given to make Juniata strong, I express deep and abiding gratitude. I speak from my own heart and in the knowledge that these gifts will bless untold numbers of students who have yet to find the meaning of Juniata for their lives.

Thankfulness

During these seven years in which I have had the privilege of serving as Juniata's president, I have been blessed through vital encounter with thousands of remarkable men and women who have contributed their own magnificent efforts to Juniata's advancement. I think of faculty, students, administrative staff, and all men and women of the on-campus constituency whose efforts point to a bright future for the College. But this bright future would be impossible without the equal dedication of trustees, alumni, parents, neighbors of the Juniata Valley, and many other helpful and sometimes unsung contributors. To each person, I express deep gratitude for the excellent advances that the College has enjoyed in these years. Because I have worked with them so directly, I wish to express particular gratitude to four administrative colleagues, Dr. Wilfred G. Norris, Mr. Foster G. Ulrich, Jr., Mr. Floyd A. Roller, and Dr. Harold B. Brumbaugh. Special expressions of gratitude are due to Dr. John C. Baker, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, who has provided us all with remarkable wisdom and guidance, and to Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, who provided an excellent foundation upon which to build.

And now we all salute Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata's eighth president, even as we express our high confidence that that which is yet to be will be better than that which has gone before.

Sincerely yours,

John N. Stauffer
